Stories are at the heart of what we do

The Saint Paul Almanac is a literary campfire around which the diverse Saint Paul community gathers to share their stories.

A successful experiment in democratic publishing, the 2013 Almanac brought together a multigenerational group of 21 community editors to choose 132 pieces by 114 writers—without the editors knowing the authors' identities—from hundreds of submissions.

High school students' work appears alongside writing by grandparents, and first-time writers appear next to Saint Paul literary greats such as Garrison Keillor and Max Shulman. Every person's story is one unique part of a larger puzzle. When pieced together with all the other stories in the Saint Paul Almanac, the book transforms into a magical overview of Saint Paul's interwoven cultures and communities, a tapestry of neighborhoods and favorite haunts.

The 2013 Almanac includes stories about jailbird ancestors and ice palaces, first kisses and school bullies, flood-threatened weddings and matchmaking worms, buses and bicycles, steamboats and cars, brave kids and wise elders, new immigration experiences and generations of Saint Paul memories, Rondo recollections and Hmong dreams, Irish ghosts and 1920s brewery workers, Bob Dylan's piano skills and one roadkilled iguana—the latter two apparently having more in common than you might suspect!
